August's sunny evenings and discount dinners came with glimmers of optimism for the restaurant world – but it didn't last long.

The dining rooms that were packed to the rafters (in a socially distanced manner) with early week guests are now having to close their doors strictly at 10pm. As the summer buzz dies down, it is arguably this month that restaurants need you to “eat out to help out” more than ever.

28-50 Covent Garden

For the majority of Eat Out to Help Out meals, it was less about saving 50 per cent, more about getting a tenner off. Last month, the Covent Garden location of wine-centric restaurants 28-50 decided to ditch that pesky cap, and offer diners 50 per cent of their entire food bill. The restaurant is continuing to offer the discount every day this month too, up until October 26 (coinciding with half term). Less money spent on food means more money to splash on the “Collectors’ List” of fine wines (or some of the 30 bottles they offer by the glass).
